Jahresbericht 2008

Luce 2, 1-20

Emperor August had established peace in his empire and wanted to count all men. In the year 4, Quirinius was his governor of the big Province of Syria in the Middle East. He decided that it was best for everybody to return to the place of birth to be counted correctly.

So every single person had to go to his hometown to be counted. Therefore, Joseph who was born in City of Betlehem left Nazareth where he lived heading for the city of his birth. He went together with Mary who was about to give birth to a child.

As soon as they arrived in Betlehem Mary went into Labor and they had to find housing to deliver the baby.

All room were booked and the only place left was a barn, which they used and were Jesus was born and bedded in a manger and covered with straw.

At that very moment sheppards watching over their flock saw a bright light and realized that something extraordinary had happened – and they were somewhat scared.

All of a sudden they heard joyful comforting voices, telling them that the greatest thing for mankind had just happened.

They said that the Messiahs, a great philosopher was born today in Betlehem; the City of David, and that would be able to help all men to conduct a happy life.

To recognize the Messiah they should search for a baby in a manger in a barn.

They hurried and found the baby Jesus as indicated in the barn.

And the magic was that they realized that Jesus would help all humans to better respect and even love each other to have heaven on Earth.
